The News pleads ignorance of the star-chamber meetings of the Democratic clique and says it is desirous of knowing about the meeting and who was there. By its pleading it again informs the public that there is a Democratic clique and thus again coincides with the Telegram. It also knows that the meetings are held, as its editor has been in them, and one time in particular paced the floor and swore like a trooper, when the name of one of the prominent men of the county was suggested for a place on the slate. The clique, however, in its anxiety to find out who gives it and its secret plottings away gives expression through one of its gutter-wipers to the desire to find out just who is doing this, but to conceal from the public the truth they profess not to know themselves by making inquiries as to who they are? There is also another lesson to be learned from this pretended desire of theirs, and that is that they want the people to believe that they do not exist as a clique. There is also another lesson, if they are honest in that desire. It is that they want to ascertain who it is among them who do not trust them. There is every reason to believe from what they say that they all distrust one another and in consequence that old adage will likely apply about rogues falling out and so forth. But, if the News really does not know and wants to know, it is our privilege to refer them to a corporation Democratic lawyer, a Democratic office-holder, a Democratic candidate for sheriff, a prominent Democrat or so from the upper end of the county, a Democrat or so around town who does nothing in particular, a Democrat who wants to be deputy sheriff and who tried to get a Republican sheriff to adopt the old-time Democratic order-shaving process and let him be the shaver, and one or two others. The description here given is such that he who runs may read.

The first of the clique's sheets has begun to warble again about illegal voting, and yet, after its crowd, assisted by one or two cohorts, had formed a conspiracy to work the courts for political purposes, but which effort Judge Mason nipped in the bud to their sad disappointment, they were not able to muster up a single case that twelve honest men of the county took any stock in. One of the cases they did lay stress on turned out, according to the information given out by the News, to be such that involved and implicated a Democratic office-holder. This fresh outbreak of warbling against alleged illegal voting is the result of a disposition to mislead the people and further as the result of the belief that the fellow who accused this Democratic office-holder is out of the country and will not return to prosecute him. Sometimes, however, people can be too fast in thinking they are safe, and it might be well for the clique just at this time not to count itself free from impending danger. We have been told that several other affidavits have been made against members of that clique on account of their use of money at the last city election, and, when the time comes, that clique will find that it has not operated in secret altogether. The affidavit business which that clique instituted will depress and repress its members even far more than it has already. Keep your eyes open and listen, for we think it is coming, and, when it does come, there is going to be wailing and gnashing of teeth among the members of the Democratic clique and its cohorts.

Grover Cleveland claims the distinction, if such it may be called, of having brought Judge Parker out for the Democratic presidential nomination, and now comes Judge Gray, of Delaware, who says Grover is his first choice and Parker second. There is also considerable talk of stampeding the St. Louis convention for Grover. It begins to look like it is a fixed-up job on Parker, and, of course, it is safe to say that the West Virginia representation will stampede for home, if Grover is trotted out too fast at the convention, as our home Democracy has long had a deep antipathy toward Grover, who promised them clover but gave them instead a barren field and a summer of starvation and discontent. West Virginia Democracy would, indeed, be in a sad plight if Grover were to get the nomination, and it ought to feel equally bad if Grover's idol, Judge Parker, gets it. In that event it would be Grover's creation getting it and the logic of the case is that the created is just as bad as the creator.

With the Democratic sheet across the bridge Clarksburg is all right until a campaign is on, so much so that its editor approves of the ways of the city to such an extent that he borrows the necessary five on occasion that he may take advantage of what he condemns for political effect as he so frequently terms it. Only a little over a year ago it will be remembered that that sheet came out after its editor had had a street brawl, declaring that it would resort to the extremes to see that the city was different. It used flaming headlines for a week or so telling what wonders it intended to accomplish, but the moment the city election was over it became gentle as a lamb and voiced its acquiescence. This shows up its methods as well as its hypocrisy. The only reason it ever puts up a holler is, as its editor says, for political effect, or selfish interest.

Some time ago the Telegram told the Democratic clique that Short could inform the public about that star-chamber meeting the Democratic clique had, in which it was decided that he should go to the prohibition convention and try to get its endorsement, but he has said never a word so far as we have been able to learn and there have been no public utterances from him that have come to our ears. Furthermore, noting that he has said has come to the ears of the News, judging from the statement it makes that it is desirous of knowing about that meeting. And in this connection it says it does not know.

The Democratic sheet across the bridge has had a great deal to say about Tweed, but never a word about Croker. The reason is that some worshippers of Croker and his methods constitute the Democratic clique. Tweed lived many years ago and is no more. Croker is alive and pursuing his methods. Come, you Crokers, croak a little about yourselves and not play so much on your imagination. The people know you as you are. Why not take an hour off and look yourselves over, so that you may know yourselves as others know you?

As further evidence of the fact that Democrats in West Virginia are afraid some of them will get something that others will not have a hand in, attention is called to the fact that no sooner is a little boomlet started for John T. McGraw for Vice President of the Democratic ticket than ex-Governor MacCorkle's friends trot him forth as a proper man for the place. But this state need not worry over the boomlet of either, as neither will be heard of in the St. Louis convention.

The Telegram called attention to the fact that the only intimidation of voters in this county was by Democratic politicians and the next day the Democratic sheet across the bridge owns up to it by saying that "Democrats do that." Since that sheet recognizes the fact and says so, why does it raise so much fuss against Republicans and let these Democratic violators go by default? Speak.

And now they are talking about running the president of the great Pennsylvania railroad system for President of the United States on the Democratic ticket. Wonder how they harmonize the thought with the walls they have been putting up against railroads and other corporations for a life time. But when it comes to finding issues any old thing that strikes them for the time being is to their liking.

To get Col. Bryan out of the way, Democrats are busy these days trying to run him for the United States Senate, but the signs point to the fact that Bryan's aspirations are higher. He will be heard from in the St. Louis convention, and the indication is that he will show up mighty strong among the "un-terrified."

The News says something about truth crushed to earth rising again. Then it follows with a plea for the Democratic clique and thus corroborates what the Telegram has repeatedly said that it is the same old county-order shaving gang revived. It is not necessary to elaborate here, since the News has so nicely sized up what the Democratic clique is up to and what it really is.

Since the Democratic clique failed to work the prohibition county convention a few weeks ago, there is just a little amount of strained relationship, as shown by the fact that the county executive committee of the prohibition party met here Tuesday and arranged for a county convention, but one of the clique organs never said a word about it. It will likely plead ignorance.
